End-of-Life Skin Concerns: Caring When You Can't Cure

Patients approaching end-of-life are at risk for developing skin breakdown; leading to discomfort, distress, agitation, family concerns and complex care. It is imperative for not only health care professionals, but also the patient's circle of care to understand concepts related to skin changes at life's end (SCALE). These concepts will assist individuals to provide care or advocate for the palliative care patient, while improving quality of life for those nearing end-of-life.
